Focus: How to Be More Productive in a World of Distraction

Our attention has never been as overwhelmed as it is today. And the research is clear - the state of our attention determines the state of our lives. In other words, if our attention is constantly overwhelmed, so are we. By transforming how you manage your attention, the better you'll be able to manage every aspect of your life.

In this story-driven, science backed keynote presentation, Chris Bailey shares profound insights into how to take charge of your attention to achieve a greater sense of purpose and productivity throughout the day. He draws from his bestselling book, Hyperfocus, and the latest neuroscientific research to equip audiences with practical, immediately implementable strategies that will help them become more productive in a world of distraction.

Key takeaways include, how to:

- Manage attention to work with greater intention.
- Tame distractions ahead of time to focus more deeply.
- Train their mind to become resilient to distraction.
- Take advantage of the dot-connecting powers of their brain to work with greater creativity.
- Use mind wandering to generate more ideas.
- Think more strategically, automatically.

Over the past decade, Chris Bailey has become a leading voice in the world of productivity through personal experimentation and a passion for discovering what truly works. Known for his practical yet engaging approach, Bailey has tested a wide range of productivity strategies—from extreme digital detoxes to intense work schedules—to determine their real-world value. He's been praised by TED Talks, Harvard Business Review, and WIRED for his energetic and insightful style, and he encourages individuals to tailor productivity methods to fit their own lives rather than follow rigid systems. Through his blend of humor, curiosity, and science-backed research, Bailey makes productivity not only accessible but genuinely enjoyable.

Bailey is also a bestselling author, speaker, and widely published writer. His books The Productivity Project, Hyperfocus, and How to Calm Your Mind have earned global acclaim and been translated into over 40 languages. With his work featured in top media outlets such as The New York Times, BBC, and Fortune, Bailey continues to shape how people think about focus and time management. His TED Talk “How to Get Your Brain to Focus” has amassed over 17 million views, and his next book, Intentional: The Science of Finishing What You Start, is set for release in January 2026. Through his writing, speaking, and experiments, Bailey remains a transformative force in helping people work smarter and live more intentionally.

Session 2: 11:15 am – 12:15 pm

Between Right and Real: Trust, Ethics and Leadership in an Era of Complexity

In today’s complex business environment, doing the “right” thing is no longer as simple as adhering to codes of conduct and acting professionally. Modern leaders face heightened challenges stemming from shifting stakeholder expectations, political polarization, employee activism, and the constant pressure of social media scrutiny. Ethical leadership now demands more than just compliance - it requires navigating a dynamic landscape where decisions carry both organizational and public implications. Morgan Hamel brings a nuanced perspective shaped by real-world experience and ethical research, encouraging leaders to rethink traditional notions of ethics in leadership.

Hamel’s approach blends powerful storytelling with insights from behavioral ethics to reveal how ethical decisions are truly made in high-pressure situations. Her sessions equip executives, managers, and professionals with practical tools to handle value-driven conflicts, maintain trust, and lead effectively amid polarization. Key takeaways include understanding the concept of “like-and-share liability,” recognizing the psychological factors behind ethical behavior, and applying strategies to mitigate risk while aligning business practices with evolving societal expectations.

Morgan Hamel is an experienced ethicist and business consultant with over a decade of expertise in corporate ethics and ethical entrepreneurship. With a master's degree in applied ethics from Utrecht University, she offers a distinctive, business-focused perspective on reputation management rooted in ethics. As president of MH Partners Inc., a boutique consulting firm, she advises leaders and organizations on navigating ethical leadership and reputational risk in a time marked by polarization, complexity, and rapid change.

Hamel's career includes 11 years in the ethics office of a major organization, as well as founding a successful ethical fashion marketing firm that surpassed $1 million in responsible sales in its first corporate year. Known for making ethics relatable and engaging, she works with clients ranging from Boards to front-line staff, helping them manage moral risks. Hamel is also a sought-after speaker and instructor, delivering ethics education to professional associations across Canada. Her TEDx talk, Becoming as Ethical as We Think We Are, is widely used in academic settings across North America.

Session 3: 1:00 – 2:05 pm

Giving and Receiving Feedback: Why This Emotional Intelligence Skill Can Strengthen or Destroy Teams

Dr. Karyn Gordon believes learning how to give and receive feedback is the cornerstone of effective management and leadership for all generations. Unfortunately, research tells us that many managers often don't know how to give feedback effectively, with employees often complaining that their performance reviews are too vague and infrequent to be effective. Without proper training, organizations run the risk of seeing employees disengage or quit altogether because of infrequent or ineffective feedback.

Audiences will learn:

- How to understand the “cultural DNA” of all five generations (including Gen Z).
- How the various generations give and receive feedback differently.
- Why giving and receiving feedback can either energize or destroy teams.
- The three simple strategies for all generations to give and receive feedback effectively.

Dr. Karyn Gordon is a renowned leadership expert whose mission is to cultivate great leaders capable of driving success in both personal and professional settings. With over 1,000 keynote speeches delivered to half a million people across 17 countries, Gordon brings deep expertise in leadership, emotional intelligence, and relationships to her work with Fortune 500 companies, government agencies, and entrepreneurs. She is the founder and CEO of DK Leadership, a global coaching company that focuses on emotional intelligence training for organizations and families. Gordon’s latest book, The Three Chairs, has earned bestseller status on the Wall Street Journal, USA Today, and Amazon charts.

In addition to her speaking and coaching work, Gordon is a well-known media personality and currently serves as the leadership and relationship expert on Canada’s top daytime show, Cityline. Her 2022 TEDx talk, “Why Confidence is the Secret to Great Leaders at Work and Home,” ranked sixth globally, highlighting her ability to distill complex research into engaging and accessible content. With academic credentials in psychology, counseling, and family therapy, and multiple certifications in leadership, Gordon’s work is grounded in research and practical insight, particularly in multi-generational workforce dynamics, engagement, and retention. Her impressive client list includes companies like Pepsi, PwC, and various government and academic institutions.
